February 18th–20th, 2010

in San Rafael, CA

with Christof Wiechert,

Leader of the Pedagogical Section

“I must give a new impulse [...] Make no mistake, it is largely a question of interest in the children and the young people and a matter of enthusiasm [...] We shall not get anywhere in any direction without enthusiasm and inner mobility [...] A person certainly cannot be tired if s/he wants to be alive in the spirit.”

Rudolf Steiner, Faculty Meeting of the Stuttgart Waldorf School, July 24, 1924

With these words Rudolf Steiner ends his engagement in the original Waldorf School. Ninety years later we might ask ourselves: Do we now also need a new impulse?

How can we balance structure and form with impulse and creativity so that they serve a “new impulse” for Waldorf schools – an impulse that is needed as we approach the centenary of this new educational paradigm.

The educational paradigm in the time of the consciousness soul is the art of education. This paradigm has three pillars, reflected in the three lectures.

Elements incorporated into this conference include:

- A concentrated schedule spanning two and a half days.
- Short work days from 9:30am-3:30pm on Thursday and Friday, and 9:30am-12:30pm on Saturday.
- An affordable registration fee of $35.
- Participants will be group leaders for morning conversations.
- Afternoon activity groups will be unique and highly participatory.
- Simple lunches available from Marin Waldorf School 8th graders, as a fund-raiser for their 8th grade trip.
