Meeting developmental challenges in the Waldorf classroom

DR. SUSAN R JOHNSON, is a behavioral and developmental pediatrician. She is a certified Waldorf Teacher with additional training in sensory-motor integration and Anthroposophical Medicine.

Today an increasing number of children embark upon their journey of learning with developmental challenges. We have a generation of children struggling to progress naturally through the archetypal pathway of incarnation, hindering their ability to engage in school life.

Teachers now need to develop new skills and capacities to be able to help their pupils through healthy development and to guide them into the world that awaits them.

For the past 30 years Dr. Johnson has been deeply involved with helping and healing children so that they can learn. During this week she will share her experience, insights and offer practical tools for teachers.
